

National Workshop on Building Digital Library with Dspace Software

27th–29th May, 2019

Organized by

The Department of Library and Information Science, Assam Women's University, Jorhat, Assam

Venue

Computer Lab, Assam Women's University, Jorhat, Assam

About the Workshop: Open Source Software has taken the computing world by storm. Its contribution to every scientific field is enormous and library and information science field is no exception. In fact, in many a case Open Source Software (OSS) has been found more effective than the commercial equivalents. The purpose of the three-day national workshop is to impart practical knowledge to participants on the use of open source tools in libraries. The open source software DSpace that deals with digital libraries and institutional repositories will be introduced and taught with hands-on practice. The workshop will also include lectures by experts to widen the knowledge in related topics of digital libraries and tools to build and manage content for self-archiving. The workshop will look at strengthening libraries in North East India through capacity building, in cutting edge areas of building institutional repositories. This training programme is limited to thirty participants who should be Library & Information Science qualified professionals.
